

The price is right

We challenged three gallery owners to choose a piece of art for three different price ranges – under £50, under £500, and over £500. And they didn't have to choose from their own collections. Here are their suggestions

Angela Yarwood, Brook Gallery, Budleigh Salterton

Under £50

I heard Chopin's prelude in B Flat on the radio recently. My most precious possession (apart from my husband and my children of course) is my piano which I play rather badly but thought I might be able to tackle this particular piece. So I would really like the musical score for this please. Probably between £10 and £20.

Under £500

Well here I could have an absolute ball in the gallery as most of what we have is in this price bracket but to be honest I can't favour one artist over another so it would have to be a gift voucher which we sell for any amount in the gallery. Alternatively, my husband (and father of my children) and I were married earlier this year at our beautiful village church in East Budleigh. I would desperately like to get some of the lovely pictures that my very talented friend Trudi Burne took of the day up on the wall, so I need some bespoke frames please.

Over £500

The late Sir Terry Frost was the person responsible for the controversial tailfin designs on BA aeroplanes a few years ago. There is a whole range of his work which is silkscreen and collage. I am amazed that such vibrant, striking pieces by such a renowned artist are still available without going through auction. Right is an example of one of them called Spanish Dreams which is one of my personal favourites, for sale framed for £1,430.
